

ABSTRACT

In an arrangement for correcting colour video signals, in particular colour video signals generated by a film scanner, with a matrix, through which the colour video signals pass and which can be used to control the proportions of three primary colours in matrixed colour value signals, provision is made of means for controlling the matrix in a manner dependent on the hue which the colour value signals respectively represent.

Figure 2